Mapping Temporal & Spatial Settings of Victorian Poetry

Look, the world tempts our eye,
And we would know it all!
We map the starry sky,
We mine this earthen ball,
We measure the sea-tides, we number the sea-sands;

We scrutinise the dates
Of long-past human things,
The bounds of effaced states,
The lines of deceased kings;
We search out dead men's words, and works of dead men's hands;

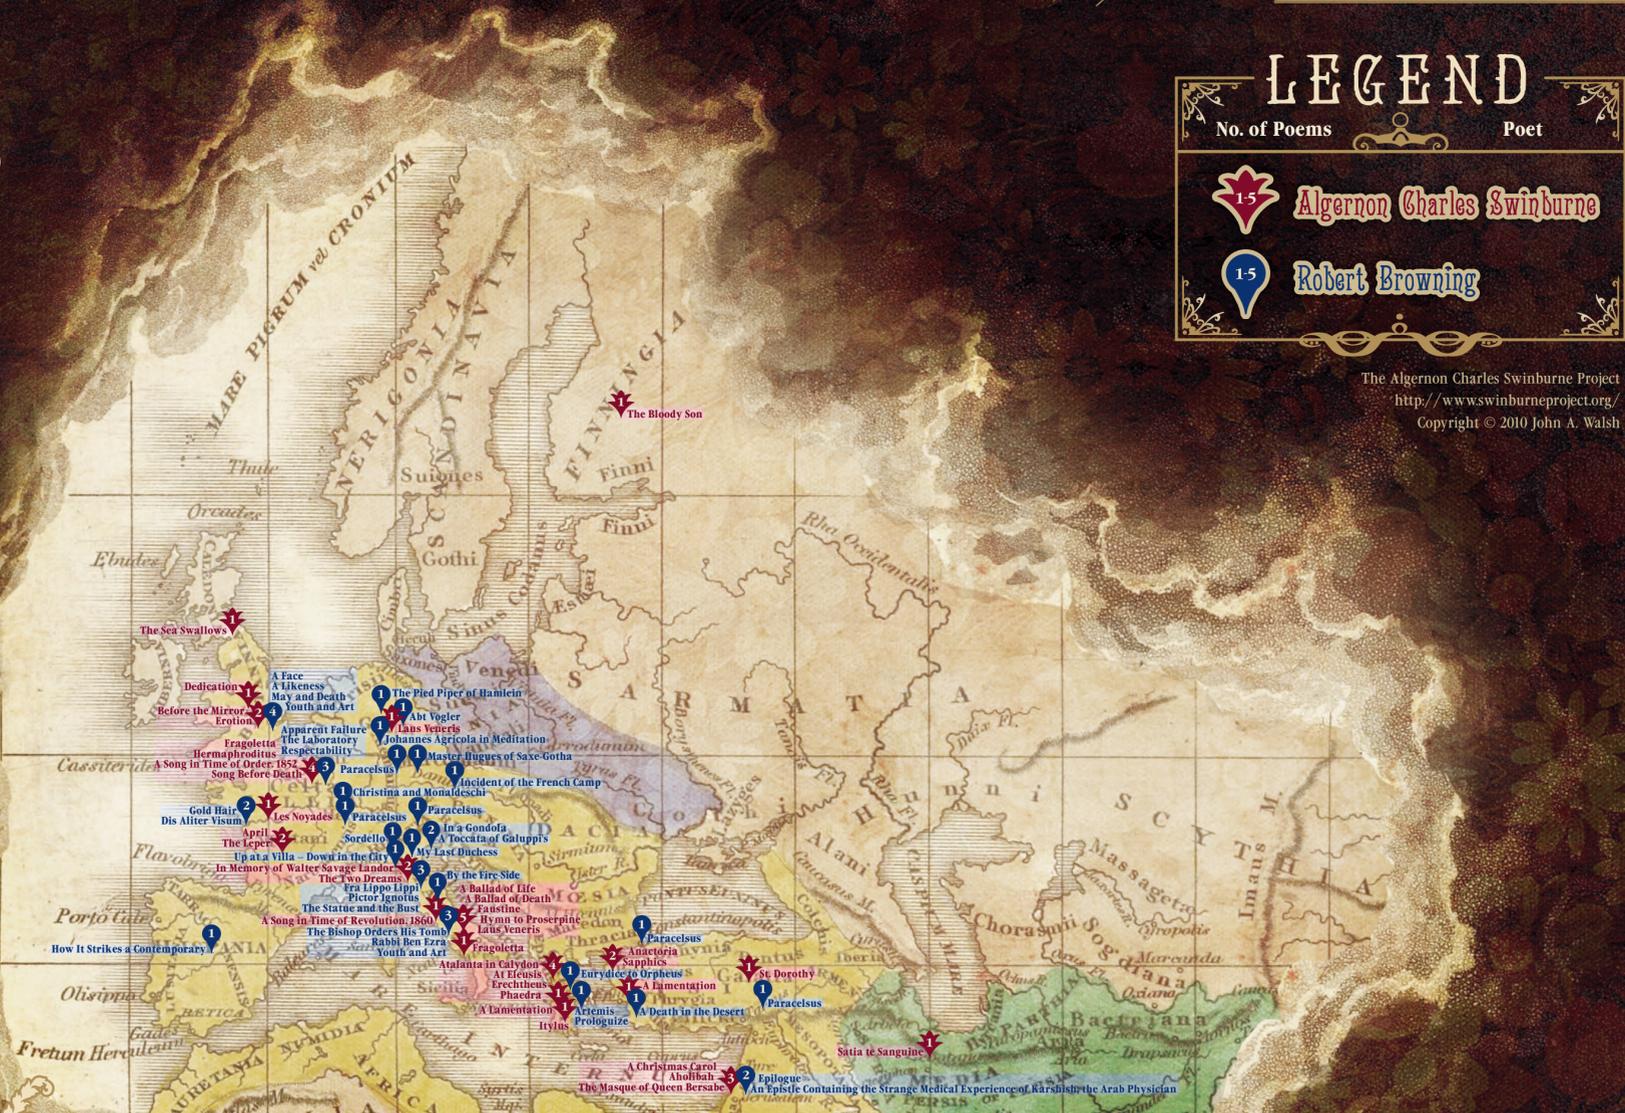

—Matthew Arnold, "Empedocles on Etna"

Setting is a basic characteristic of literature. Novels, short stories, dramas, film, and much poetry—especially narrative poetry—typically have an identifiable setting in both time and space. Victorian poet Matthew Arnold's "Empedocles on Etna," for instance, is set in Greek Sicily in the fifth century B.C. "Empedocles" was published in 1852. Swinburne's Tristram of Lyonesse (1882) is set in Ireland, Cornwall, and Brittany, but in an uncertain legendary medieval chronology. In the absence of a narrative setting, many poems are situated temporally and spatially through allusion, metaphor, and other tropes. Victorian Hellenism and Victorian medievalism are two frequently discussed phenomena in Victorian literature. Many Victorian poets were fascinated by the literature, history, and culture of ancient and classical Greece and medieval Europe and the literary traditions inspired by those periods. Major Victorian poets, including Tennyson, the Brownings, Arnold, Rossetti, and Swinburne, provide a rich variety of representations of classical and medieval worlds. But what does the quantifiable literary data reveal about these phenomena? Of the total number of published works or lines of verse from any given period, or among a defined set of authors or texts, how many texts have classical, medieval, biblical, or contemporary settings? How many texts are set in other periods, such as the Renaissance, with which Robert Browning was so fascinated? The data can answer these questions and provide scholars with other insights into literary history. After explicitly documenting (in XML code, a database, or other structure) the temporal and spatial settings of individual literary works, one can map and visualize the distribution of literary settings across historical periods and geographic space; compare these data to other information, such as year of publication or composition; and visualize networks of authors and works sharing common settings. The data set is a growing collection of work titles, dates, date ranges, and geographic identifiers and coordinates. Challenges include settings of imprecise, legendary, and fictional time and place.

The map here is based on a sampling of poems by Victorian poets Robert Browning and Algernon Charles Swinburne. A prototype online version is available at <http://purl.oclc.org/swinburnearchive/vis/acsvs0002/>.
